

David Moriña, UAB/CRM

Title: Handling misreported data in public Health

Abstract: Misreported data pose significant challenges in public health studies, often leading to biased conclusions. This seminar, titled "Handling misreported data in public health," introduces recent statistical methods for addressing data misreporting. Real-world applications discussed include estimating the true incidence of genital warts and gender-based violence, where reporting is significantly influenced by social and psychological factors, among others.